Scenario 1:
You are married with 2 kids and have a job as a nurse. On top of your workload and long hours, when you get home you still have chores and cooking to do. You need some kind of recipe generator to help you create lunch, dinner and snack ideas for your family. Something quick and easy and you can pick what you want to put in the meal.

Task 1: Choose how long you want to spend on the meal; 15, 20, 30, 45, 60 minutes. Then choose if you want breakfast, lunch, dinner or snack category.

Task 2: Import ingredients you have in your pantry at home. Click generate recipe and the app will create the perfect recipe for you in a matter of minutes!

Task 3: Save and name the recipes you and your family love so you can remake them. You also have the option to take a photo of your recipe and upload it to your feed! On your feed you can search hundreds of profiles and recipes that people really love!

Notes

3 things I would change about the app:
1. Use an easier way to input ingredients.
2. Have filters for your feed so you can see posts of only 30 minute dinner recipes, 10 minute snacks, or 15 minute breakfasts.
3. Have the option to choose if you will use ingredients in recipes that you have to buy at the store. If you choose yes it will generate a bunch of recipes and under each one will be a list of the ingredients you do not have at home and need to buy.

3 things I would NOT change about the app:
1. Keep the feed the same. People love an "instagram" kind of app. This will make it easier for people to experience what real people cook and recipes they love more than others.
2. Being able to input the ingredients you have at home. Besides searching by name or category or entering it in manually, add an option where you can take a photo and the app will recognize and record it to the pantry.
3. Having the easy access favorites tab. That makes it quick and easy for people to find recipes they have already made and loved before.
